

Service-Learning Courses Offered in Spring 2012

Service-learning is a pedagogy that utilizes community service projects within the context of an academic course. Academic service-learning distinguishes itself from internships and other credit-bearing community experiences in several ways.

- First, the community experience is a component of an academic course, used as a "text" for student learning.
- Second, service-learning projects are designed in partnership with community to meet an expressed community need.
- Third, a structured reflection activity is utilized to help students understand how their community experiences link with the academic and civic learning objectives of the course.
