Agilent Technologies has donated $150,000 worth of test and measurement equipment to Sonoma State University's new engineering department.

The equipment includes fiber-optic and electronic test instruments used to track lasers and measure unknown light sources.

In addition to the donated equipment, Agilent also recently offered $24,500 worth of office furniture to Sonoma State's School of Science and Technology. The cubicles and desks will be used by staff and faculty who are working out of temporary offices while the science building is renovated.

In 2002, Agilent gave Sonoma State $1 million in equipment to open the Agilent Communications Lab, where students learn to use test and measurement equipment in research.
