Tough Choices: Interactions Between Health Care Providers and Victims of Domestic Violence

Speaker: Jeanette Koshar, PhD
From: Sonoma State University

Jeanette Koshar started her nursing career in 1975 as a labor and delivery nurse at UCSF. In 1979, she obtained her Master’s degree and began a 25yr career as a women’s health care nurse practitioner. This past summer she had the honor of providing care for her third generation of patients. In 1996, Jeanette obtained her PhD from UCSF and joined the faculty at Sonoma State University.

The purpose of the research being presented here is to describe health care provider’s thoughts and actions about their roles with victims of domestic violence. In a recent qualitative study she developed a three dimensional balance theory describing those views. The results reported include how health care providers slide back and forth between a process model and an outcome model during their interactions with patients in violent relationships. Dr Koshar’s research endeavors truly reflect her intense desire to assure women receive optimal health care. Please join us as she presents her latest research toward this vision.
